

Entering the dark forest, you could barely see moonlight shine through the thick trees. There was a driveway, if you followed it you would come across an old Victorian mansion with smashed windows and broken glass all over the place. The legend says that there once was a murder that had happened in this house. The owners were the Adams, a rich couple from west England. Once they got into a fight over an oil painting that Mrs. Adams wanted to hang on a wall, but her husband didn't want it, because he thought the painting was ugly. Mrs. Adams got so angry that she pushed her husband down the staircase, left the city and was never ever seen again. The house, with all the furniture inside, was left abandoned for many years to come. Inside there was an old armchair which was Mr. Adams's favorite and next to it, there was a footstool. Let's not forget about the creepy terrace where Mrs. Adams used to hold tea parties and used her beloved china tea set. Everything was untouched for a very long time. A new family had decided to move in, the Williams family. Mr. Williams was the owner of a newly opened restaurant and Mrs. Williams was a stay at home mom, they had two children Matthew and Emma. Everything was fine for the first few months but as time passed the new family was seen in town less often until once, they didn't leave their house for two weeks. One day their neighbor Mrs. Lewis decided to check up on them, but no one answered the doorbell. She noticed that the door handle had been broken so she decided to walk inside and saw something that she would never forget. The whole Williams's family had been murdered... hanged. Police arrived minutes later and started investigating. They claimed whoever did it, were professionals and hid their crime well. This case was given to one of the best detectives in the area, Emily Burton. When she arrived she started investigating the house and everything that had happened to it. She checked the house's history, bills, letters etc. She found out that someone had been blackmailing the family and wanted to expose their secrets. If the family left their home, blackmailers would kill them. Every letter they kept receiving was more aggressive and more disturbing. The final letter they received before their death had a dead rat in it and a note saying "You're next - Q" . Detective Emily hadn't been making any progress for weeks. When she walked into the house everything looked the same, except for the office room. It looked like someone had visited it and looked for something. Lots of papers were thrown around. While looking for more clues she noticed security cameras hidden in the house, she had missed them the first time she visited. She found the main computer and watched the tapes. Weird things had happened inside the house. Objects would change places and footsteps would be heard during the night. While she was watching the footage she started hearing footsteps downstairs, but suddenly they stopped. After a few seconds someone started running upstairs she quickly pulled out her gun and started pointing it at the doorway, footsteps were getting louder and louder and something was getting closer, she was ready to pull the trigger, but then she saw a dog's shadow and a few moments later a big family dog entered the room and the dog was very happy to see a human, but clearly the dog was starving so the detective decided to give her some dog food. While the dog was eating she noticed the dog's collar. The dog's name was Lola, but there was also a note saying "Get out, I'm watching you - Q". Emily packed the computer and took the dog with her. While walking to her car she noticed another note on her windshield saying "Never come back again - Q". That night she had a bad dream, she was being chased by a very large figure that kept saying "Emily, you're next" or "Emily I'll find you" followed by a very evil laugh. The next morning, when she woke up she was terrified...

Ignas 8B